THE PILOT-Southern Pines, North Carolina

Wellman Featured In Review Issue

A variety of essays, interviews, articles, poetry and fiction by and about some of North Carolina's most noted (and most neglected) writers appears in the new second issue of the "North Carolina Literacy Review."

The semi-annual "Review" is published at East Carolina University by the ECU Department of English and the North Carolina Literacy and Historical Association.

The 228-page issue includes a retrospective tribute to the late Manly Wade Wellman formerly of Pinebluff and author of more than 80 books; an interview with Duke University poet, Stantonsburg native James Applewhite (along with seven new Applewhite poems); a Fred Chappell essay on Canton's two downtown movie theaters; and article by Michael Parker on growing up in Clinton; three Louise Anderson stories and profiles of Frances Obrist Wellman and New Bern's Rose McCullough, who at 108 is the state's oldest known writer.

Editor of the "Review" is Alex

Albright, a professor of non-fiction writing at ECU. Associate editors are Bertie Fearing and John Patterson, two of Albright's colleagues of ECU. Art director is Eva Roberts, a design professor in the ECU School of Art.

Issue two can be purchased in bookstores across North Carolina or is available by mail for $9.50. A limited number of copies of the first issues are still available for the same price. The inaugural issue is continuing to receive lavish praise for its contents and design, throughout North Carolina and elsewhere.

Mail orders should be sent to NCLR, Department of English, ECU, Greenville 27858. Members of the N.C. Literacy and Historical Association receive copies as part of their membership privileges.

Among the other contributors in this issue are Stephen Smith and Sam Ragan of Southern Pines, both writing on Wellman, Betty Hodges of Durham and Sally Buckner of Raleigh.
