

NORTH CAROLINA

Miscellany

Investing in Literary and Visual Artists

by Margaret D. Bauer, Editor

Congratulations to two new NCLR poets, both selected for honorable mention by final judge Meg Day, and to the writers reviewed here, on their new books. And thank you to all of the visual artists who have allowed us to feature their work to complement the creative writing throughout this issue.

We close the premiere spring issue with the reminder that we are able to provide honoraria to artists and writers, thanks to our collaborators: the North Carolina Writers' Network, the North Carolina Poetry Society, and our founding organization, the North Carolina Literary and Historical Association. In these times of emphasis upon measuring a program's value via its "Return on Investment" (ROI), allow me to remind you that there is a very significant return on your investment in these organizations (including NCLR) via memberships, subscriptions, and donations, all of which allows us to continue what we do to promote the literary and visual artists of this state.

And finally, writers and publishers, please take note: beginning this year, NCLR is managing the state's book awards for "Lit & Hist." Look for more about this transition and the new nomination submission guidelines on our website. ■

- 104 The House Is a Wreck
a poem by S.L. Cockerille art by Katy Mixon
- 106 Blue Light
a poem by Melanie Tafejian art by Sujal Manohar
- 108 They're Doing Everything They Can, Everything They Know to Do a review by Heather Bell Adams ■ Meagan Lucas, Here in the Dark
- 110 Finding the Place
a review by Jamie Tews ■ Kristine Langley Mahler, Curing Season
- 112 More True than Slant a review by David E. Poston ■ Christie Collins, The Art of Coming Undone
■ Ross White, Charm Offensive

ALSO IN THIS ISSUE

- 6 ■ North Carolina Disability Literature poetry, creative nonfiction, and book reviews
- 24 ■ Flashbacks: Echoes of Past Issues
poetry, creative nonfiction, and book reviews